ABSTRACT This is a case study of a covert action operation in [REDACTED] It is basically but not exclusively rural-oriented, and encompasses many aspects of covert action, including 25X1C political development operations, civic action, counterinsurgency, propaganda, polling, lobbying, and student operations. As a by-product, it also produces considerable intelligence and counterintelligence information, and offers potential for [REDACTED] operations. The study covers the operation from its inception, including the requirement, target analysis, the establishment and development of the mechanism, security and control problems, funding, and the various covert action uses to which the mechanism has been put. Included with this basic handout and four attachments is an explanation of contents and instructions for presenting to a class.
